You Remember Your Best Work. You Don't Have A Record Of It.

Most creators can name their best work off the top of their head. Almost none have a complete, written record of everything they've made — which means almost none can see the actual shape of their body of work, or protect it.

WHAT YOU REMEMBER

- Your favorites, and whatever's recent
- Scattered across drives, platforms, DMs
- Ownership status: assumed, not checked

WHAT'S ACTUALLY RECORDED

- Every piece, not just the favorites
- One place, one format, one record
- Ownership and backups confirmed per piece

FOR EACH PIECE, YOU'LL RECORD

Title or name · Date or period made · Format (what it actually is) · Where it lives today · Who it was for or has seen it · Whether you hold clear rights to it · Whether it's backed up somewhere else · Whether someone else could find and understand it without you explaining it.

One Row Per Piece. Work Backward From Recent.

A project, a piece, a release, a client engagement — whatever "a unit of work" means in your practice. Most creators find this easiest done in one sitting.

Repeat for every piece of work worth recording — this page is reusable for as many rows as you need.

Once It's Started, Ask Three Questions.

QUESTION 1

What pattern shows up across the body of work — a theme, a method, a recurring subject?

QUESTION 2

What percentage of it is preserved somewhere durable, not just on one platform or one drive?

QUESTION 3

If you stepped away for a year, what part of this body of work would be hardest for someone else to find or make sense of?

A complete inventory is the raw material for real Preservation-phase infrastructure. When you're ready to turn it into an actual estate and succession plan, see Creative Estate Mapping™ ($200).

Build the infrastructure. Strengthen the practice. Create the legacy.
