Foundations Aren't Assumed. They're Audited.

Most leadership foundations are half-built and never checked. This audit checks them — quickly, and honestly.

ASSUMED TO BE TRUE

- Values are “known” but never written down
- Priorities live in your head, not shared
- Consistency depends on mood, not a system

ACTUALLY IN PLACE

- Values are stated in one plain sentence
- Priorities are legible to people around you
- At least one real system carries the load

This checklist is a fast way to tell which side you're actually on.

Check What's True Right Now.

- ☐ I can name my core values in one sentence, without notes.
- ☐ My team or collaborators could describe my priorities the same way I would.
- ☐ I have a clear picture of what I'm responsible for versus what I'm not.
- ☐ I know which relationships and structures I'm currently leaning on most.
- ☐ I've written down what "working well" actually looks like for me.
- ☐ I have at least one system — not just a habit — that keeps me consistent.
- ☐ I know where my leadership infrastructure is thinnest right now.
- ☐ I've told at least one other person what I'm building.

Foundations are early. Start with whichever unchecked item surprised you most — that's usually the real gap.

4–6 CHECKED

Real structure exists. Pick the weakest checkbox and build one piece of infrastructure around it next.
