.LLab Leadership Legacy Profile™

Connect your personal leadership strengths to organizational influence, infrastructure, and what outlasts you.

PHASE	INVESTMENT
III · Internal Operating Systems	$150

Leadership is personal. Infrastructure has to be transferable.

Most leadership development stops at the person: better habits, sharper communication, more self-awareness. All of that matters — and none of it, by itself, becomes infrastructure. This workbook is the bridge: it takes what's genuinely yours as a leader and asks the harder question — what does this look like once it doesn't depend on you personally being in the room?

THE CORE IDEA

A Legacy Profile isn't a personality assessment. It's a map from who you are as a leader, to how that shows up in the organization, to what of it should be built into infrastructure that survives your involvement.

Why this belongs in Phase III

Phase III — Internal Operating Systems — is where individual leadership becomes organizational structure. You can have brilliant instincts and still build nothing that outlasts you, if those instincts never get translated into something the organization can run without you personally supplying it every time. That translation is what this workbook does.

How to use this workbook

Budget 45 minutes, and be specific rather than aspirational — write the leader you actually are under pressure, not the one you'd like to be described as. The Three Circles model on the next page gives you the structure; the worksheet after it does the actual mapping.

The Three Circles.

Legacy infrastructure moves outward, from the personal to the permanent. Each circle depends on the one inside it being honestly understood first.

1 Personal Strength — what you actually bring

Not your title. The specific way you lead: how you make decisions under pressure, what you notice that others miss, what people come to you for that they don't take to anyone else. This is the raw material — real, but not yet organizational.

2 Organizational Influence — where it shows up in the system

Trace your personal strength to its actual effect on the organization: a decision that only gets made well because you're in the room, a standard that holds because you enforce it, a relationship that only you maintain. This is where personal leadership starts leaving fingerprints on how the organization runs.

3 Legacy Infrastructure — what survives without you

The honest question: if you stepped away for a year, would this influence still exist? If not, it's not infrastructure yet — it's dependency dressed up as leadership. This circle is about converting influence into something documented, taught, and structurally embedded.

"The measure of a leader isn't what they can do. It's what keeps working when they're not there to do it."

Map your Legacy Profile.

PERSONAL STRENGTH — THE SPECIFIC WAY YOU LEAD THAT OTHERS COME TO YOU FOR

ORGANIZATIONAL INFLUENCE — WHERE THIS SHOWS UP IN A REAL DECISION OR OUTCOME

HONEST TEST — IF YOU WERE UNAVAILABLE FOR A YEAR, WOULD THIS STILL EXIST?

LEGACY INFRASTRUCTURE — WHAT WOULD NEED TO BE DOCUMENTED, TAUGHT, OR EMBEDDED TO MAKE THE ANSWER "YES"?

CIRCLE	DEPENDS ON	FAILS WHEN
Personal Strength	Self-awareness	You can't name it specifically
Organizational Influence	Visibility into real outcomes	You mistake activity for effect
Legacy Infrastructure	Documentation and teaching	It only lives in your habits

— CLOSING

From profile to practice.

This workbook produces a map, not a finished system. Two honest next moves make it real.

- Tell one person what you found. A co-founder, a successor, a direct report — say out loud what you noticed about your own influence and what needs to survive without you. Naming it to someone else is what starts the transfer.
- Pick the one piece of influence with the highest risk if it disappeared tomorrow, and take it into the .LLab Leadership Operating System™ — where it becomes a repeatable organizational practice instead of a personal habit.

WHERE THIS FITS

The Legacy Profile is Phase III — Internal Operating Systems: it's where personal leadership starts becoming structural. What you find here feeds directly into Phase IV — Preservation, and specifically into the .LLab Legacy Infrastructure Map™, which does the same exercise at the level of the whole organization.
